CHOICE OF AN ACTRESS.

Being at foundation a womanly woman, she always expected to marry. I say expected, instead of hoped, because she had constantly too many admirers to doubt her opportunities—to her mind it was simply a question of meeting the right one.

She felt sure that when the right man came she would be willing to give up everything for him; indeed, she contemplated with a certain serene satisfaction the coming of a time when her triumphs and ambitions and fame and freedom would be exchanged for the proud servitude of wifehood.

Still she wasn't in a hurry to meet the right man. He would come when he did come—and when he did come it couldn't be helped, and she would be glad. Upon various occasions she had thought him come.

Upon these occasions she had experienced a distinct sensation of fretfulness. She had conscientiously given the admirer a fair chance to prove himself the right man, but had always been down-right glad when he had failed to do so. The admirer always made some mistake fatal to his interests.

Perhaps he lost his head, and went down on his knees; that always immediately settled it. She was much too proud and too humble a woman to be willing to marry a man who went down on his knees about it.

Or he lost his head, and threatened to shoot himself, or drink himself to death, or jump in the bay.

Now and then she was moved with regret at the storm which she had raised, and expostulated in a kindly fashion with her victim, but more often she shrugged her white shoulders, saying, if not to the man, at least to herself, that the man who was foolish enough to want to shoot himself because a woman did not love him, had better shoot himself. Some men were doggedly masochistic; these she was a bit afraid—yet so far these meek, dogged wooers had presently developed into bores, which, she felt, lessened the danger. I say danger, because she regarded the possibility of marrying any man but the right man a danger.

Sooner or later, in the course of every admirer's attention she made a stanch effort to dismiss or escape him.

She argued to herself that escape from the right man would be impossible, and that escape from any other was to be regarded as wisdom, and hailed as good fortune.

She never went out of her way to attract men—in the first place she had no need to, and besides she really did not care to increase the chances of coming across this more or less to be dreaded right man.

She kept pretty closely to her work, enjoyed the footlights, spent her money freely, rejoiced in her independence, and thought herself a lucky girl.

Of course she had admirers. She considered that a natural result of her position, profession, sex and attractions. She permitted men who loved her certain privileges—they might kiss her hand, come to the theatre and see her play, and give her flowers and feel miserable about her.

Any one of them, she realized, might develop into the right man, so she treated them all conscientiously. She never misled them or led them on, and since she was frank with them and never discourteous, she felt she had a right to be exacting about their manners, and she always was.

Upon the three or four occasions when a man's devotion had stirred in her a certain degree of interest she had rigidly demanded time to find out and to make up her mind.

To find out meant to satisfy herself that the man in question and the "right man" were of one "identity." To make up her mind meant to decide whether, right man or not, she would have him!

The candidate having always failed to stand this test, she had, directly she was so assured, dismissed him promptly and gently.

By what subtle sign of authority she would recognize the right man she did not know. He would be big, she was sure of that, and very gentle; he would meet her mentally, "understand" her, satisfy her morally and tenderly, master her physically.

He would be above all her little "arts" and caprices, but he would admire them; he would be too dignified to go down on his knees from not being able to help it, yet quite fond enough of her to do it. For her part, she would never wish it, and she would be very meek and gentle and obedient, and glad to be so; but—meanwhile she was free, and of that she was glad, too.

Really, her life was delightful; she lifted her white arms into her pretty lace wrapper and laughed to herself as she settled for her little rest before retiring. Her parlor was warm, and the light softened by colored shades; a bit of sandalwood among the logs sent a spicy fragrance out with the heat, she rubbed her head among the cushions and laughed again to herself.

It was a notion of her own, this half hour rest before retiring. For the sake of it she usually came home at once from the theatre.

Going out to suppers and sitting up and drinking wine was stupid, besides such a course would soon spoil her good looks. A warm, all-by-herself half hour in her own pretty room, with the clacking of her fire for company and her milk

Go to the Palace Bakery for fresh whole-some bread, cakes, pies and candies.

CAPITAL NOTES.

The Congress of Nevada still in Pro-found Deliberation.

Cleveland and Wallace, transacting a general lobbying business, wholesale and retail, still find trade good at Carson, and have consented to remain about ten days longer and will call upon those they have occasion to interview. The Boscowitz Bros.—Frank and Charlie—and other commercial travellers have been doing Carson.

La Grippe has clawed on to the good people of the town and has considerably dampened the enthusiasm, as far as social events go. The Legislators, having tried numerous novelties at the capital, some of them are now having a collar and elbow with this popular complaint. At least, that is what they call it.

A number of vacant seats have been observed in both houses this week, and it has been necessary to have several calls of the House. Much the same character of business has been transacted this week as in the weeks past. That is, they have done about the same amount; or speaking more definitely, they have met each day and adjourned.

Only one instance of possible matrimony is reported, and that seems to be doubtful, none of the belles of Carson having seemed to have caught on, or the members have not been eligible or there is a screw loose somewhere. Even the married members have been remarkably reserved, and even a sensational rumor or scandal cannot be dug up.

The Board of Equalization bill passed the Senate Thursday, and it is said that it will pass the House without trouble. This seems to be the program, the "powers" having ordered it so, and there is no use backing out of it.

H. M. Y. condescends to speak to the rural members in a social way now and then, but after the lapse of a dozen days he will forget that he ever knew them and will not recognize them, unless fate should return them here two years hence, when he will renew their acquaintance. Strange how friendly some people get sometimes and at others they don't speak. We were quite friendly at one time, but now "we never speak as we pass by."

The climate of Carson during the two weeks past has not been of a character advantageous to the Christian religion, nor has it promoted amiability in the smallest sense, but if any remarks are made about it some "oldest inhabitant" will dig up and tell you all his experience for the last twenty years.

The Stevenson trial has been progressing during the week. The sympathies seem to be about equally divided for both sides. Considerable interest has been taken in the case by outsiders and a goodly crowd are in attendance during the sessions of court. It will likely be concluded Saturday, and what the outcome will be it is as yet hard to conjecture.

The Legislature will conclude its labors about the 19th inst. The members express themselves generally as glad of it; the Carsonites will not be surely grieved, as they have already given vent to their grief over the disappointment and the complete wreck of the parties in the air—built in their minds—a few months ago.

The sad side of life has been represented in the loss of an old citizen, George Tully, the serious illness of Senator Williamson's son, and sad news received by other Representatives of a change in their families.
